Scientific Information

Vulvovaginal and perineal reconstruction is becoming fashionable, and is managed by different surgical specialties.

Gynecologists, general and plastic surgeons, and urologists are the physicians usually involved in managing the wide spectrum of clinical situations requiring reconstruction. Nevertheless, no consensus agreement exists among the different international societies regarding a standardized approach in this field.

For this reason, and also because vulvovaginal and perineal reconstruction impacts upon many aspects of the individual's wellbeing, from functional rehabilitation to sexuality, a multidisciplinary approach is required. The complexity of this topic brings together contributions from many disciplines, each sharing a unique perspective.

This meeting represents a multidisciplinary multinational sounding board in which physicians with proven experience, coming from different European countries, try to improve the care and management of women requiring vulvovaginal and perineal reconstruction.
